This book is essential reading for anyone concerned with Europe's future. In a changing global order where Europe's fate must no longer be reliant on the actions of other world powers, this book advocates for a proactive step towards building a capable and confident Europe.

This work doesn't shy away from identifying the key challenges. Each chapter, written by one of the 21 distinguished authors who are specialists in their respective fields, offers concrete proposals for addressing all issues of relevance.

This book focuses on how Europe's politics and economy need to reposition themselves to address the changing security requirements in light of tectonic power shifts around the globe.

Broad range of topics

The range of topics is broad, spanning from political decisions and military considerations to the resilience of the economy in the face of geopolitical mega-events, as well as the impact of climate change on Europe's security.

Additional themes include the growing importance of space exploration, hybrid warfare, energy security, disinformation and propaganda, deterrence through connectivity, algorithmic warfare, automated weapon systems, countering threats in a hyper-connected information cosmos, reforming the rules-based world order, "Trump 2.0", Europe's role in a multipolar world, interactions between NATO and the European Union, the development of defense models for the European population, natural disasters and climate change, supply chain security for industries, and more.

The authors outline on 524 pages what our world might look like in 15 years, the challenges this presents, and the strategies Europe should adopt to maintain a significant role in this new world order.
